Chels--These are all good ideas and I asked Huma to pass them on. I'm copying her to ask that she have someone call or email you to respond. I love your feedback.

i like the home page content but i've realized the home page and other pages' formats could be more attractive and user friendly. e.g., the press releases are awkwardly organized (you have to click on 2009 or just the aggregate dates before) vs.

the most recent ones automatically appearing. i think they should also be searchable by subject or country. for the homepage, i like that a few stories are scrolled through and that its easy to access the most recent state dept news - i.e., your events as well as daily briefings, other events. i like that a country is highlighted each day but it could be snazzier and its coloring should mirror that of the white house site... so all in all i think its good that the site is being overhauled provided the content is still up front and made even more accessible and searchable than it already is!
also seriously you need someone else editing the pictures they put of you on the homepage scroll - some are fantastic and some are weird!
i love you!

Ill ask. But that's very strange, especially since the personal lines and state dept are totally separate.

I don't understand why it was busy. I have three lines and I wasn't on them. I'm asking Huma to find out why.
